The Couple With The Green Patches

(Original.)
The patient whose eyesight I was concentrating all my professional skill to restore had made his weekly call and passed out. My attendant threw aside a sliding door and admitted the next patient for consultation. He was a handsome, healthy looking young fellow, with eyes as clear as crystal. I advanced, looking at him inquiringly. "Doctor," he said, "I wish you to take out my right eye."

"What's the matter with it?" I asked, astonished. "Nothing, but I wish you to take it out."

"I will pervertate no such unprofessional nonsense."

The young man stepped aside to a table on which some instruments were lying, took up a sharp pointed knife and, holding it before his eye, said:

"If you will not take it out professionally, I will take it out unprofessionally."

"Hold!" I said, seeing that he would surely carry out his intention. "Tell me why you wish to lose your eye and I will oblige you."

"I am desperately in love with a lady who has lost one of her eyes—at least the sight of it—and she is obliged to wear a green patch over it. The disfigurement has made her inordinately sensitive. She positively declines to admit herself on any man for life."

"I see," said I. "Now, my friend, let me give you a piece of advice. Instead of cutting out your eye, cut out the woman you love from your heart. There are plenty of women who would be delighted to marry you."

"Doctor, fulfill your promise. I have done my part in giving you my reason. Now do your part."

I summoned an assistant, placed the man on an operating chair, gave him an anesthetic, and when he came to himself and I held a glass before him he saw a green patch instead of an eye and felt considerable pain.

"Now," I said, "if you don't want the loss of one eye to affect the other and leave you totally blind, don't remove the covering on any account."

"For how long? I must change the patch occasionally. One won't last forever."

"When it is too much soiled to be worn longer, come to me, and I will change it for you."

"Very well. Your fee, doctor?"

"Fee? Do you suppose I would take a fee for maiming a man? I performed the operation to prevent your making it worse."

"I am very much obliged to you, doctor."

And the man who wished his sight impaired followed the man who wished his sight restored.

"Next!" I called to the attendant, muttering to myself, "What a queer world!"

A month later when "next" was called he proved to be the man who had wished his eye removed. He was accompanied by a young lady wearing a patch similar to his. But for the patch and the saddest face I ever saw she would have been extraordinarily pretty.

"Doctor," said the man, "I have called to ask you to change the patch, and I have brought with me the lady on whose account I had my eye removed. We are soon to be married."

"Oh, doctor," she said in a wail, "why did you do this?"

Without noticing her remark I turned to the man and told him that I would change his patch, but in order that no ray of light should enter the place where the eye had been I must darken the room. I then closed the blinds and changed his patch. When I had finished I asked the young lady if it might not be possible for me to help her with her own eye. She hesitated and looked meaningfully at her lover. I took the hint and asked him to wait without until I made an examination. As soon as he had done the girl turned to me and said in despairing tones:

"Doctor, I have ruined his life. When I met him I was temporarily wearing a patch for some slight weakness in my eye. In a fit of coquetry I told him what he told you. I never dreamed that he would think he loved me so desperately. I shall never remove my patch, though I do not need it."

"I dislike," I said, "to lecture a woman, but I confess that women who give way to such feminine temptations deserve the punishment they receive and often do not receive."

"I deserve all and more," she moaned. "I even wish I were dead."

"When are you to be married?"

"In two weeks. Will you come to the wedding?"

"Yes. Your intended will need a new patch for such an important ceremony. I will be there in time to put it on."

The next day I received the cards and on the morning of the wedding went to the house where the marriage was to take place, arriving about ten minutes before the appointed hour. The groom's best man on learning my name took me to a back drawing room, where the bride and groom were waiting. The bride started to close the shutters, but I called her back and, going to the groom, untied the strings of his patch and took a bit of cotton off his eye, and he stood looking out of two good eyes. Then I tore the patch from the eye of the bride.

I will not attempt to describe the paroxysm with which the bride, seeing the two sound eyes, threw her arms around the man's neck and burst into hysterical weeping—a weeping of delight.

THE TIDY TADPOLE

How This Cheerful Little Canine Made and Developed.

A wonderful spirit of tidiness seems to pervade the tadpole world. They always eat whatever has become useless—their own eggs, their superfluous companions. Even those who are only weakly are cleared out of the way and the victors take it all as a matter of course. I have disturbed a strong member of the community just as he had begun to dine off the tail of a weaker brother, but the sufferer has not troubled to escape—he simply waited till the frantically returned to complete his deadly work.

For some time there is no grave change in the tadpoles. They simply grow and become so far transparent that their internal mechanism, which consists of our coil of intestines, is plainly visible. When, however, they are about three months old a careful observer can distinguish a tiny foot on either side of the base of the tail. These grow slowly, but seem unable to move independently until shortly before the border land is passed which leads to perfect froghood. The hind legs have reached their full size before the front ones appear, and while the feet grow slowly, the hands are ready made and can be used at once. For a day or two they can be seen under the skin before they venture forth, and their possessor is very restless and excited. He rushes madly about, jostling his comrades, and no doubt being voted a bore; then a more vigorous effort is made to break the skin and the tiny hand and arm appear.

There seems some rule about the order of precedence here, as there is when the whiskers go, for last year my tadpoles, almost without exception, had their right hands some hours before the left, while on previous occasions I have had an entirely left handed crew.—Chambers' Journal.

MUSIC AT SEA.

Conditions Under Which Ships' Sails Sometimes Sing.

Some curious facts have been noted with regard to the sound conducting qualities of ships' sails. When rendered concave by a gentle breeze, the widespread sails of a ship are said to be excellent conductors of sound.

A ship was once sailing along the coast of Brazil, far out of sight of land. Suddenly several of the crew, while walking along the deck, noticed that when passing and repassing a particular spot they always heard with great distinctness the sound of bells chiming sweet music, as though being rung but a short distance away.

Dismayed by this phenomenon, they quickly communicated the discovery to their shipmates, but none of them was able to solve the enigma as to the origin of these seemingly mysterious sounds which came to them across the water.

Months afterward, upon returning to Brazil, the crew determined to satisfy their curiosity. Accordingly they mentioned the circumstance to their friends and were informed that at the time when the sounds were heard the bells in the cathedral of San Salvador, on the coast, had been ringing to celebrate a feast held in honor of one of the saints.

Their sound, wonderful to relate, favored by a gentle, steady breeze, had traveled a distance of upward of 100 miles over the smooth water and had been brought to a focus by the sails of the particular locality in which the sweet sounds were first heard.

This is but one of several instances of a similar kind, trustworthy authorities claiming that this same music is often heard under somewhat the same circumstances and especially in a moisture laden atmosphere.—London Tit-Bits.

English Regard For Teaching.

If there is one occupation which Englishmen are unanimous in condemning as degraded and demanding it is that most fascinating, most difficult, delicate and important work, the training of the mind. In what are humorously called "the higher walks" of teaching there are respectable salaries to be earned and agreeable rooms or houses for occupation. If, however, of the dress of utility, a man may once more take rank as a gentleman, and if he becomes head of a house the supreme usefulness of his position commands universal and silent respect.—Nineteenth Century.

Gentian Root.

Gentian root, often used as a tonic, is considered in many malarial countries a remedy against intermittent fever. Especially is this the case in Corsica, in that section of the island near the town of Aleria, which is infested with malaria. The inhabitants recently protested violently against the introduction of quinine on the part of the medical authorities, declaring that they would not abandon the remedy which had been used among them for centuries, the gentian root, either powdered or simply masticated.

Quite the Contrary.

"After all, my friend," began the solemn stranger, "life is but a dream, a"

"Not much, it ain't," snorted the hard headed man. "In nearly every dream I ever had I was gettin' more money than I knowed what to do with."—Philadelphia Press.

Frenchmen and Spanish.

French people find it difficult to speak Spanish properly. Victor Hugo boasted that he was the only Frenchman who could really speak Spanish, something of Spain being mingled in his ancestry.

But for some trouble and sorrow we should never know half the good there is about us.—Dickens.
